Foreword

TFL Education is a UK based company established:

“To advance the education of pupils and teachers anywhere in the world by providing and assisting in the provision of character and leadership educational programmes.”

The focus of our work is based on the premise that by explicitly teaching character qualities and leadership skills, we can impact pupil outcomes by providing pupils with the rationale, language and tools to raise aspiration, promote achievement and increase happiness.

To support the development of pupils’ character qualities and leadership skills, we have focused on writing culturally sensitive primary and secondary school curriculum programmes. Our aim has always been to design and publish up-to-date, relevant programmes that promote a values-led education approach and provide exceptional value for money.

We are sensitive to the demands on school budgets, teachers’ workloads, insufficient preparation time, and the continual constraints being placed on curriculum time. With this in mind, we have looked to create a flexible and supportive provision that takes into account the current issues facing all education systems around the world.

Learning to Lead has been specifically written for Key Stage 3 pupils. The main thrust is directed at personal development, ethics, morality and an awareness of community and social justice. It is designed to be acceptable to pupils from all backgrounds, cultures and beliefs. Since topics such as sexual relationships and high risk behaviour have no relevance to our character and leadership programme they have no coverage. Social issues such as drugs, alcohol and tobacco abuse also fall outside our remit. Financial advice for youngsters is a separate programme best designed by experts in this field.

Engaging and interactive, each fully resourced module of Learning to Lead stimulates learning experiences that encourage your pupils to develop the language, attitudes and behaviours that are the foundation of wellbeing and personal effectiveness.

Further benefits of the programme include:

- Individual pupil booklets
- Teachers’ booklets, guidelines and resources for every module - teachers love it!
- Teacher training and on-going support
- Supports PSHE, SMSC - including fundamental British values, and Citizenship education
- Bronze, Silver and Gold certification as pupils progress through the programme

This document outlines the structure of our Learning to Lead programme before going on to explicitly detail how the programme maps to statutory guidance for governing bodies, school leaders and school staff published by the Department for Education.

Learning to Lead

Endorsed by the Royal Chartered Management Institute, Learning to Lead consists of three, independent modules, each designed and specifically written for Key Stage 3 pupils.

In Module A, pupils are introduced to the idea that, throughout their lives, each of them must take responsibility for leading their personal development. The exploration of heroes, heroines, tyrants and tormentors helps to unravel the concepts of character and leadership. Working in groups and individually, pupils explore the qualities they must develop if they are to be ready for their 'Big moment'.

The 21 units of Module B actively encourage personal development. Creating a vision, articulating goals, team leading and speech writing are just some of the practical sessions that mingle with an examination of further character qualities and leadership skills. The units are punctuated with tasks that encourage reflection and review. By the time pupils reach the final unit they are in a position to monitor their progress and plan their next steps.

In Module C, we assume that pupils have accepted that our opening premise on leadership is true. Now is the time to learn about 'Being a good leader'. Pupils are encouraged to seek out opportunities in school, at home and in the community to further develop their skills.

Citizenship and Prevent Duty Education

1. Key Concepts	Learning to Lead
1.1 Democracy and Justice	Learning to Lead is designed for the pupils to be active participants. Games, video and audio clips stimulate discussion and group decisions. The early units explore the concepts of character and leadership by focusing on what constitutes good and bad leadership through an examination of national leaders and their form of governance. The pupils begin to build a stock of character qualities and leadership skills with individual units looking and exemplifying desirable qualities such as 'Tolerance' (A9), 'Honesty' (A19) and 'Discipline – one rule for all' (C11). Threaded throughout the course are units offering advice on 'Dealing with difficult people' (B12) and 'Dealing with trouble' (A16).
1.2 Rights and responsibilities	Learning to Lead promotes an understanding of self worth. The worthiness of others is also a central tenet of leadership and is specifically addressed throughout the course. 'Leading or bullying?' (A4) highlights the different perceptions of peoples' rights. (A6) 'A worthy cause' shows how we can actively redress injustice and in (A12) 'Courage – being brave', pupils look at the courage that is needed to 'Step forward and speak up' (A14).
1.3 Identities and diversity: living together in the UK	Learning to Lead is inclusive 'All aboard!' (C8). The units reference world religions, use names and personalities from every culture and are relevant in both the West and East.
2. Key Processes
2.1 Critical thinking and enquiry	Learning to Lead is written using the same format for each unit. An Activity is followed by a Reflection, which leads to the central Theory. This is strengthened by a second Activity and Reflection. A Conclusion summarises the key objectives for the pupil and an Extension activity allows further exploration of the topic. First-class resources stimulate discussion and challenge pupils to articulate personal and group decisions; use evidence to resolve problems; and test their own values and ideals.
2.2 Advocacy and representation	Learning to Lead is predicated on the idea that every pupil has the potential to develop the qualities and skills that we equate with success. Practical units such as 'Giving a speech' (B9), 'The power of the pen' (B10), 'Coaching' (C6) and 'Student leaders in action' (C4) give ample opportunity for pupils to practise the skills learned throughout the course. Activities encourage debate, justification and democratic decisions.
2.3 Taking informed and responsible action	Learning to Lead encourages individuals and groups to understand the link between 'Having a belief' (B4) and 'Creating a vision' (B5). Fortified by qualities such as 'Perseverance' (B11), 'Resilience' (B14) and 'Enterprise' (B16), pupils use their knowledge of 'Team leading' (B6), 'Problem solving' (B15) and 'Management skills' (C15) to take appropriate action on any issue.
3. Range and content	Learning to Lead consists of 63 units each of which addresses a quality, skill or behaviour that would be prized in good citizenship. Several units 'Cults and gangs' (A11), 'Building trust' (A17), 'We are all leaders' (B21) and 'Learning to listen' (B7) concern the responsibilities of the individual and the community in upholding legal and human rights. In the module ' Being a good leader ' (C1 – C21) pupils are encouraged to take their skills in to the wider community by participating in groups and organisations.
4. Curriculum opportunities	Learning to Lead invites pupils' participation in both school based and community based citizenship. The range and breadth of resources that accompany the course ensure that global voices and cultural perspectives are heard and recognised. The Activities and Extension suggestions offer a multitude of opportunities for cross-curricular teaching and learning.
5. Prevent Duty	Learning to Lead (A1 – A21), (B1 – B21) and (C1 – C21) provides a responsible education framework that contributes to building pupils' 'Resilience' (B14) to radicalisation. The 3-year personal development programme is designed to identify and teach the values, qualities, skills and behaviours required for effective leadership of self and others; and fosters a safe environment for debating controversial issues.

PSHE - Personal Wellbeing

1. Key Concepts	Learning to Lead
1.1 Personal identities	Learning to Lead encourages a positive sense of self. 'Knowing your worth' (B3) assesses the personal qualities of the pupil and accentuates the importance of knowing yourself. Exploration of 'Self-esteem' (A18), 'Being assertive' (B19) and how to bounce back from perceived 'failure' (C19) encourage a 360-degree style review.
1.2 Healthy lifestyles	Learning to Lead unit (C18) 'Beating the blues' provides Activities, Reflection and Theory that focus on the reality of physical and mental fitness. The unit encourages the four pillars of exercise, support, abstinence and discussion.
1.3 Risk	Learning to Lead addresses the concept of risk in 'Courage' (A12) and 'Thinking differently' (A13). Building the confidence to try new ideas can be found in 'Enterprise – the first move' (B16). The idea of intelligent risk taking and the concept that risk equals change are discussed in 'Taking risks' (C17).
1.4 Relationships	Learning to Lead encourages pupils to assess and value relationships. An exploration of the dangers of 'Cults and gangs' (A11) is balanced by the skills involved in 'Building trust' (A17). Relationships are central to the theme of 'Team leading' (B6) and are further reinforced in the aims of 'Being a good leader' (C1). Skills development such as 'Coaching' (C6) and the emotional development of 'Trusting others' (C12) further enhance this aspect.
1.5 Diversity	Learning to Lead is an appropriate vehicle for people of all creeds and cultures. Diversity is celebrated in the voices of Benazir Bhutto, Rosa Parks, Martin Luther King, Gandhi, Muhammad Ali, Anwar Sadat and Menachem Begin. The course is written for a world audience and this is reflected in the multi cultural references made in all the activities. The pupils are shown that by 'Building trust' (A17), showing 'Empathy' (C16) and encouraging 'Discipline - one rule for all' (C11) we can build a society that will welcome 'All aboard!' (C8).
2. Key Processes
2.1 Critical reflection	Learning to Lead covers all the skills and processes associated with SEAL. Critical reflection is encouraged when pupils assess their 'Credibility' (B20) and reflect upon the way they speak, look, think and behave. In 'We are all leaders' (B21) pupils reflect on their personal strengths and achievements before plotting areas they need to develop. 'Learning to listen' (B7) and 'Coaching' (C6) promote opportunities to give and receive feedback. 'Goal setting' (B8), 'Motivation' (B17) and 'Dealing with difficult people' (B12) are dealt with in separate units.
2.2 Decision making and managing risk	Learning to Lead addresses the concept of decision making and managing risk in 'Courage' (A12) and 'Thinking differently' (A13). Building the confidence to try new ideas can be found in 'Enterprise – the first move' (B16). The idea of intelligent risk taking and the concept that risk equals change are discussed in 'Taking risks' (C17). Pupils are encouraged to 'Step forward – speak up' (A14) as a strategy to resist peer pressure and introduces the theory of group dynamics.
2.3 Developing relationships and working with others	Learning to Lead provides a platform for pupils to learn how to develop relationships and work with others. 'Teamwork' (A15) is the core that encourages the development of qualities such as 'Loyalty' (C14), 'Empathy' (C16) and the necessity of 'Trusting others' (C12). This is founded on the pupil's understanding and application of 'Emotional Literacy' (C7).
3. Range and content
	Learning to Lead consists of 63 units each of which addresses a quality, skill or behaviour that are of value to personal wellbeing. More than 20 units within the course address personal values. Pupils are encouraged to understand that 'Knowledge' (B18) when combined with 'Honesty' (A19) lead to realistic 'Goal setting' (B8). 'Taking risks' (C17) teaches an approach to intelligent risk taking.
4. Curriculum opportunities
	Learning to Lead provides pupils with the opportunity to explore issues using a range of media and internet sources as well as encouraging participation in the wider community. The delivery model makes optimum use of scenarios, biography, drama and discussion. Current issues affecting young people are debated using the tools taught throughout the units. In Extension activities pupils are encouraged to widen their research and are directed to helpful websites. Although not always explicit the values and behaviours taught throughout the course are applicable to other challenges in the Personal Wellbeing strategy.

PSHE - Economic Wellbeing, Financial Capability and Careers guidance

1. Key Concepts	Learning to Lead
1.1 Career	Learning to Lead is a 3-year personal development programme designed to identify and teach the values, qualities, skills and behaviours required for effective leadership of self and others. The full course consists of 63 units, each of which addresses one aspect of the above to support personal development in preparation for life in the modern world.
1.2 Capability	Learning to Lead uncovers the potential of the individual. It aims to build upon existing capability by teaching the attributes of good character required by leaders. 'Enterprise – the first move' (B16) is just one example of the values taught. At the end of 'Born to lead' (A1 – A21) pupils must plan for their 'Big moment' (A21). In 'Taking the lead' (B1 – B21) pupils prepare to recognise that 'We are all leaders' (B21) and in 'Being a good leader' (C1 – C21) pupils learn that the knowledge and skills that they have accrued they must now 'Pass it on' (C21).
1.3 Risk	Learning to Lead addresses the concept of risk in the early units 'Courage' (A12) and 'Thinking differently' (A13). Building the confidence to try new ideas can be found in 'Enterprise – the first move' (B16). The idea of intelligent risk taking and the concept that risk equals change are discussed in 'Taking risks' (C17).
1.4 Economic understanding	Refer to footnote
2. Key Processes
2.1 Self-development	Learning to Lead is based upon the premise of self-development. Pupils are advised that they 'can do' and are then shown how 'to do'. 'Self-esteem' (A18) is only one of the many qualities covered. 'Teamwork' (A15), 'Management skills' (C15) and the aim of 'Leading wisely' (C13) identify future roles. Continual review of the skills and values taught can be witnessed in units such as 'Why me?' (B2), 'The big moment' (A21) and 'Pass it on' (C21)
2.2 Exploration	Refer to footnote
2.3 Enterprise	Learning to Lead includes units that identify the qualities and skills needed in the working world. 'Taking risks' (C17) is a comprehensive view of one of the main aspects of 'Enterprise' (B16). 'Problem solving' (B15), 'Teamwork' (A15) and 'Being a good leader' (C1) are some of the key skills the pupil will use on his/her career path.
2.4 Financial capability	Refer to footnote
3. Range and content	Learning to Lead identifies the qualities and skills of the individual that employers value and require and teaches planning and personal review.
4. Curriculum opportunities	Learning to Lead provides pupils with the opportunity to explore issues using a range of media and internet sources as well as encouraging participation in the wider community. The delivery model makes optimum use of scenarios, biography, drama and discussion. The course develops those qualities and skills most sought by employers and Higher Education, including self-review and personal development planning. Pupils engage with ideas, challenges and applications from the business world. First written in 2010, the course addresses many issues current in the world today. In Extension activities pupils are encouraged to widen their research and are directed to helpful websites.

Footnote: Learning to Lead's main thrust is directed at personal development, ethics, morality and an awareness of community and social justice. It is designed to be acceptable to pupils from all backgrounds, cultures and beliefs. Since topics such as sexual relationships and high risk behaviour have no relevance to our character and leadership programme they have no coverage. Social issues such as drugs, alcohol and tobacco abuse also fall outside our remit. Financial advice for youngsters is a separate programme best designed by experts in this field.
